EDITORIAL.

NOW that the Chapel is approaching completion and is about to take its place as an integral part of the life of the School, it is fitting that we should consider what the Chapel will mean to us in the years to come. The Chapel, we hope, will be to us not merely the centre of our School life, the place where hopes and aspirations have their birth, and about which memory clings; it will indeed be all this, but it will, if we are not mistaken, be something more.

To us who have watched stone added to stone during these anxious months of war, the thought of our Chapel is insensibly bound up with thoughts of the war, and above all with those members of the School who have given their lives in the service of their country: the Chapel is essentially a War Memorial, not only because some definite feature of the building will go by that name, but because it epitomises the School life, which has helped to make those who have known how to give so freely.

Let the Chapel, then, be a monument to our dead, to those of whom it was written:

Our sons shall rise from thrones in joy,

Each one buckling on his armour;

Morning

Shall be prevented by their swords gleaming,

And Evening hear their song of victory:

Their towers shall be built upon the rocks.

ROLL OF HONOUR.

KILLED IN ACTION.

Stanley Wilson Armitage, who was a Corporal in the 9th Battalion, King's Royal Rifle Corps, was killed in action in Flanders on September 25th. Born on December 31st, 1893, he entered the School in September, 1906, and left in July, 1911. He became Captain of the Junior House, and was later on a School Prefect. On leaving School he went into business in Nottingham, and on the outbreak of the war he enlisted in the King's Royal Rifle Corps together with a number of his friends. Later on he was offered a commission, but decided to stay in the ranks. He was promoted to the rank of Corporal and went out to France in the Spring of this year.

Jasper Prescott Phillimore, who was a lieutenant in the East Kent Regiment (The Buffs), was killed in action in Flanders on October 13th. Born on November 25th, 1891, he entered the School in September, 1905, and left in July, 1908. On leaving School he went to King's College, London, to study Engineering, and in July, 1912, he took his B.Sc. in Engineering. But in the meantime he had decided to become a missionary and in October, 1912, he entered St. Augustine's College, Canterbury, and had practically completed his course when war broke out. He soon decided to take a commission and was gazetted to the 6th Battalion of "The Buffs." He went out to France at the end of June and fell in a charge near Vermelles on October 13th.

Francis William Halsey, who was a 2nd Lieutenant in the R.G.A., was killed in action in France on November 14th. Born on June 18th, 1894, he entered the School in May, 1908, and left in July, 1913. He was Captain of his House and also Captain of the School. He went up to Magdalen College, Oxford, in October, 1913 with a demyship in Natural Science. When war broke out he was working at Munich and it was with great difficulty that he reached England some weeks later. He at once joined the 9th Battalion of the Hampshire Regiment as a private, but was soon promoted to the rank of sergeant. In January he obtained a commission in the R.G.A. He was stationed for some months on the Firth of Forth, but towards the end of July he was sent out to France to the Trench Mortar School at St. Venant. After going through a course there he was appointed to the 3rd Trench Mortar Battery. He was killed by the explosion of a shell on November 14th.

Geoffrey Barham Johnson, who was a Captain in the Norfolk Regiment, was killed in France on November 22nd. Born on August 10th, 1893, he entered the School in September, 1908, and left in July, 1912. He was Captain of his House and a School Prefect. On leaving School he went up to Jesus College, Cambridge, where he read for Holy Orders. On the outbreak of war he took a commission and was gazetted to the 7th Battalion of the Norfolk Regiment. He was promoted Captain before leaving England for the front.

WOUNDED.

J. M. Howlett, Capt., 7th Batt., Norfolk Regiment.

J. Hammond, Capt., 7th Batt., Norfolk Regiment.

E. L. Harris, Trooper, Canterbury Mounted Rifles.

H. J. H. Cox, Lieut., Attd. 2nd Batt., Dorsetshire Regiment.

MILITARY CROSS.

E. C. Scott, 2nd Lieut., 12th Batt., Middlesex Regiment, attached 178th Tunnelling Coy., R.E.

"For conspicuous gallantry and devotion to duty near Tambour du Clos, where on two occasions he organized and led parties to the rescue of gassed miners. On the second occasion, September 6th, 1915, he led a party down a shaft 55 feet deep and saved the lives of six miners who were gassed. He remained down till he thought all were rescued and was then brought up, himself almost overcome, and laid on a bed; but on hearing that all the miners had not been rescued, he endeavoured to return, although still suffering from the effects of the gas. He showed great coolness and absolute disregard of personal danger."

A. J. D. Robinson, Lieut., 4th Batt., East Lancashire Regiment.

"On the night of June 4th and morning of June 5th he made himself conspicuous in the calm way in which he led and controlled his men, particularly when they were enfiladed. He led his men out of the danger spot when Captain Cunliffe was killed, keeping them together and no confusion."

MENTIONED IN DESPATCHES.

A. J. D. Robinson, Lieut., 4th Batt., East Lancashire Regiment.

FROM THE FRONT.

Little by little the facts about the recent attack appear. On the section of front with which we had most to do, namely from Lens-Bethune road northwards for about a mile, the affair opened very well. Just south of the road, where we should have been, if we had had our "juice", there was a Highland brigade, commanded by a general for whom I think any of his men would have done anything. Certainly it did very well.

When the line advanced, it gained the German front line without much loss. The advance after that was rather less easy, especially in the neighbourhood of Loos, in which there were machine guns and snipers, and in a wood beyond Loos defended by the same means. In spite of this the advance was much more rapid than had been expected, and when our troops reached the eastern slope of Hill 70, the necessary reinforcements were not forthcoming. It was here that the brigade mentioned above lost rather heavily, as it was exposed to heavy fire, and had no artillery support, this being timed to arrive some time later. The 44th Brigade had therefore to fall back to the western side of the hill. The German dead were lying very thick in Loos, and I am afraid that the wounded left behind by us in our retirement across Hill 70 were killed by the Germans. This I had from one on the spot, whose evidence is not necessarily infallible on that account.

On Sunday night and Monday morning the Germans counter-attacked but gained very little ground, and Loos itself was never in danger of recapture. The position there now seems to be that both sides are entrenched on Hill 70, and the remnants of the 44th Brigade have been taken back to reform. Further north, things did not go so well. On Monday the Guards Division went into action, and apparently saved a delicate situation, though the facts are difficult to get at. Further south, the 47th (London Territorial) Division, carried out the task allotted to it with fairly small loss, that is, it took the Germans' 1st and 2nd lines on its front, and held them. I have heard the London Territorials most highly spoken of, and those whom we have in the battery are excellent men in every way. There are also some splendid troops in the New Army; the Highland battalions, with whom we have been working since August, are a fine lot and did extremely well in the attack. My mortars are splendid little affairs; unfortunately there exists a deplorable ignorance as to their capabilities amongst superior officers of all kinds, and I do not think we are given the opportunities which we could undoubtedly improve. A weapon which can throw 4lbs. of high explosive 700 yards, and can be carried, ammunition and all, by five men for nearly half a mile at a quick walk, is a factor deserving of more recognition than it gets. Other types of mortar differ from this description, in throwing either lighter or much heavier projectiles, and in being much less mobile. I spoke to some prisoners; they said that they had been at the front only three days, had been forced to go forward by an officer with a revolver, and had all left wives behind in Schleswig. They were middle-aged Landsturm men, and seemed very shaken.

F.W.H.

The other day our battalion went into action about 750 men and 23 officers strong and came out with about 110 men and 1 officer; all our best officers and men have gone and we shall never be able to replace them, I am sorry to say, as our reinforcements are very young and small. Thus I find myself second in command of the battalion and over a company of 26 fighting strength; so, as you can guess, there is plenty of work to be done.

H.B.R.

We arrived here at the local base on the 2nd at about 5 a.m. It is really a wonderful place. There is about the finest harbour imaginable—it runs about four miles into the island and has high hills on all sides and I suppose there are about 50 or 60 ships in it at least and deep water nearly throughout. The whole place is in charge of the Admiralty.

A midshipman came on board and spent the evening with me. He was in charge of a picket boat at the landing in April by the Australians. He is only eighteen and his voice has not cracked yet, but he had been through the whole of the landing and every man in the two boats of troops he landed was killed. Apparently one of the bravest men there was the skipper of the Clyde; after he had run the vessel ashore he and another officer dived overboard and swam round and made fast all the ropes of the lighters under a hail of shrapnel and machine guns and then proceeded to pick up the wounded in the sea and get them ashore again.

This island is about the most primitive place on earth I should think. The Government is said to have paid a big price for the field where we bivouack—it is one of the few cornfields in the island. They have just got the harvest in and are threshing the corn by making three donkeys walk over the heaps and a woman, on a toboggan pulled by an ox, also goes over it. To-day they are separating the corn by flails and make a beastly dust. The inhabitants here are the strangest crowd I have ever seen—they smell like Greeks and look like Moors and wear Turkish costumes. There are a lot of men carrying stones to make a jetty. On their way back to fetch more stones they all walk in step and drone a chant and clap their hands.

The Australians are people who have won my admiration. They are absolutely magnificent. They have been here about four months and had the most awful slaughtering and are as cheery as could be. Their trenches are much more perfect than those made by the English troops at the other end of the peninsula and they do their fatigues without a grumble. Certainly the Colonial shows up very favourably in contrast to the Englishman in initiative and energy and willingness. The Ghurkas are another very fine lot of men and have been doing great things out here.

J.K.V.

We arrived on the peninsula on the morning of August 7th in time to see the second day of a furious bombardment of the Turkish positions by sea and land. A couple of monitors were firing close under the cliff and the noise of their guns was really terrific. The Depot is situated in dead ground a few hundred yards inland up a slope. A clear view of the whole peninsula, from sea to straits, can be seen by going 50 yards further up. The trenches along their whole length can be more or less seen with ordinary field-glasses. A long grey sheet of smoke lay along the Turkish lines, further marked at intervals by outstanding columns of dust, spreading and slowly clearing, the sign of the large calibre high explosive from the ships. One stood fascinated by the sight and could not go until all was over and only the intermittent pop of rifle fire could be heard. The whole thing is beyond description. The splitting blast from the naval guns, followed by a thunderous rumble and quaking of the atmosphere—a sense of something rapidly being urged into space, which visualises suddenly into a column of earth and smoke. The boom of the bursting charge slowly reaches back and the column, spreading, hangs over its work and is quietly lifted away. One wakes up suddenly to the growling and thumping of the lesser guns, loosing off in an endless round of sustained effort. A momentary slackening of the noise brings up the drone of flying shells. The swooping of one falling close by is heard above the others and the uproar is again in full swing. Tall spouts of water rising from the sea spring up in seeming silence close to our ships and make them change position. Their aim is seldom good and their ammunition old and growing short. A great part of it has developed the pleasing habit of not exploding.

HONOURS.

D. W. Jacques, R.M.C., Sandhurst,
(Prize Cadetship).

C. V. Deane, R.M.C., Sandhurst.

F. W. H.

One cannot picture Frank Halsey as dead. Life, colour, running water, the wind on the heath, sunlit gorse, the song of birds will always speak of him to those who knew him best.

He had many gifts, and not the least was his infectious gaiety :

"Bright, eager, a face to remember,
Alert in all work as in play,
A spirit that knew not December,
That brightened the sunshine of May."

His enthusiasm, his delight in simple things, made him an attractive companion by mountain, moor and river.

A Magdalen demyship before he was eighteen indicated his abilities, and his year at Oxford endorsed the opinion that he was one to make his mark in Science.

Many remember with pleasure his first solo at a School Concert, and the simplicity with which he played, a tiny boy perched out of reach of the pedals. He was no mean musician, his taste was good, if catholic.

He had clear ideas, and fine ideals. Simple, transparently honest, of a spiritual nature, the ugly things of life were repellent to him.

Faults? without doubt; but he has done such fine things, that those who knew them, have certainly forgotten them.

As Captain of his House, as Captain of the School, he inspired a sense of trust that could not question—his loyalty was wonderful. He cared for the things of "good report" and strengthened the belief of others in them.

Gresham's School and those who knew him are the richer for his life.

BOY SCOUTS.

REPORT FOR MICHAELMAS TERM. TROOP I.

For various reasons, of which the bad weather has been one, there has been less activity than in the corresponding term of last year. We have had one good field day and that was in spite of most unpleasant weather. The roads and heaths round what we call 'Butterfly Woods' supply an ideal battle ground and with the aid of Troop II, who represented the Anglo-French relieving force, we tried to reproduce the Serbian imbroglio as it was at that time.

We have had a little rifle practice with a B.S.A. air-rifle and found one or two fair shot.

A collection was made by each Patrol Leader in aid of the appeal issued by the Chief Scout for a new motor-ambulance for use in France. The sum of £4 10s. was sent to Headquarters.

An examination on the lines of the Pathfinder's Badge was held on November 28th, some months having been allowed for preparation by map and personal survey. The competition was disappointingly small. Hepburn did a very creditable paper and Maynard did very fairly.

The troop now number 52 and a new provisional patrol—the Otters—has been formed. Patrol Leaders and Seconds, this term are as follows:—

Storks.—Hepburn, Oakeley.
Woodpigeons.—Daly, Johnston quint.
Wolves.—Maynard, Stilwell.
Lions.—Wright, Gurney mi.
Peewits.—Birkett, Robinson tert.
Owls.—Gooch, Gillam

The following badges have been won:—

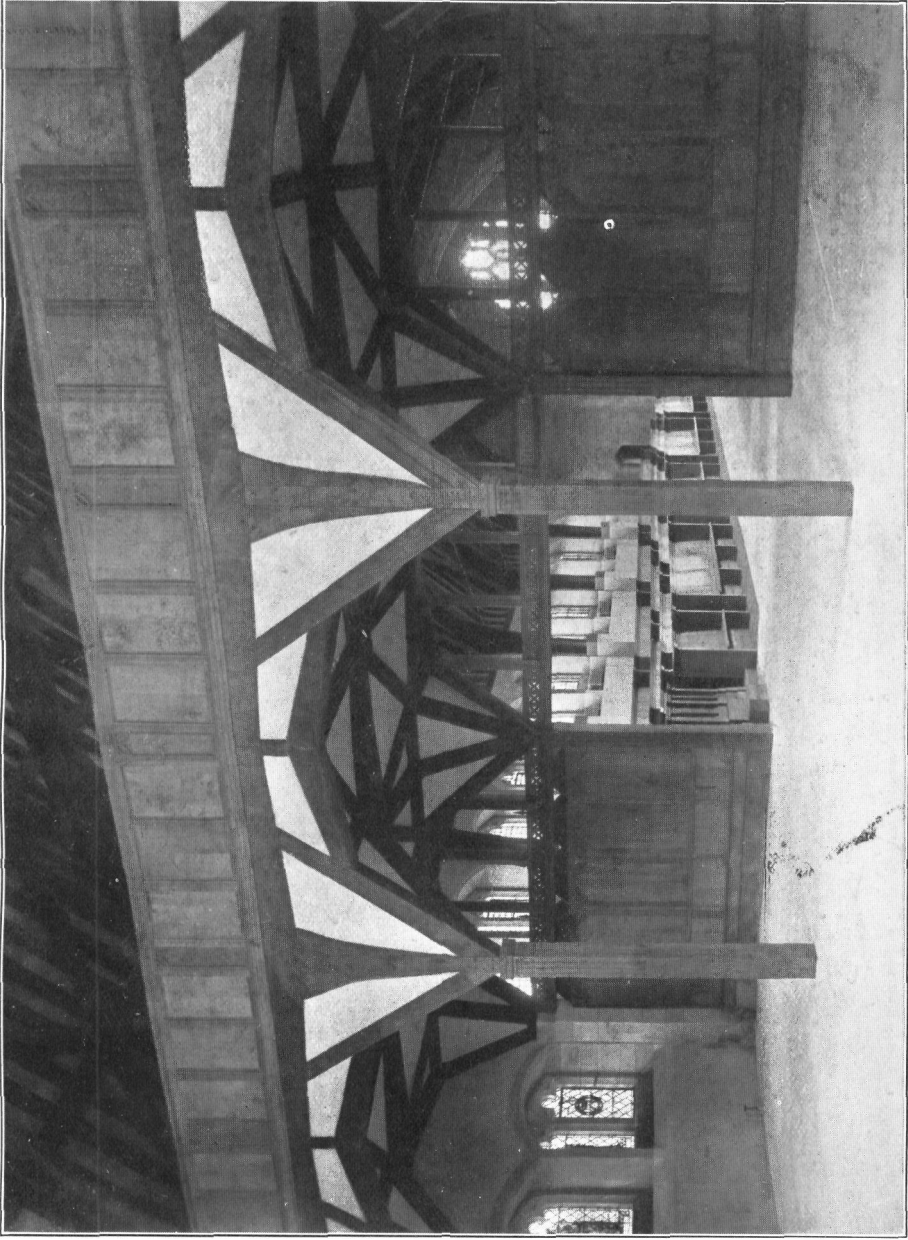

King's Scout.—J. C. S. Daly.
First Class.—J. C. S. Daly, A. C. Maynard.
All Round Cords (6 Proficiency Badges), J. C. S. Daly, A. C. Maynard.
Cyclist.—I. Hepburn, G. F. Wright, A. C. Maynard, E. W. Robinson.
Musician.—I. Hepburn, A. Schegloff, D. Johnston.
Naturalist.—G. N. Stilwell.
Pathfinder.—I. Hepburn.
Signaller,
Handyman,
Master-at-Arms. } A. C. Maynard.
Pioneer.
Swimmer.—J. C. S. Daly.
Fireman.—F. S. L. Gooch.

In addition the special War Badge (for a minimum of 28 days of not less than 3 hours service for purposes connected with the War) was gained by:—J. C. S. Daly, (2nd time), D. R. S. Allen, P. F. Grove, A. C. Maynard, F. S. L. Gooch, D. P. R. Sanderson, J. P. Orford, H. K. Bagnall-Oakeley and

D. A. WYNNE WILLSON,
Scout Master, Troop I.

TROOP II.

Rain, short days, game preserving—all are trials to the Scout in the autumn months. While the wasps were still active, signalling, in which a fair number are adept, was the order of the day. The drenched return from Hell Hole and Gresham Castle; the exciting, if not perilous, ascent and descent of the Weybourne wreck; the great day with Troop I., our brilliant rescue of the beleaguered 'Serbians,' a day of ambushes, and ruses, and crawling and much running away; a trail through peerless mud which none but a Scout would have ventured, all stand out clearly; but one ill-starred afternoon, when a patrol crept unobserved into

THE CHAPEL, DEC, 7TH, 1915.

Salthouse, deprived us to our great loss of our Assistant Scout Master, Mr. Cooke, with whom we warmly sympathise.

Observation, except with the few, is not a strong point, obvious signs are overrun, an enemy allowed to slip through, paths not noted.

It would be well to remember, 'more haste, less speed.'

The appeal from Headquarters for a Scout motor-ambulance was keenly taken up, £3 being sent in answer.

A third Patrol, Woodpeckers, has been formed with Orford ma. as leader, Taylor mi. second.

The following badges have been gained:—

War Service—Orford ma, Pye, Baker, Taylor mi.

Friend to Animals—Orford ma.

First-class Scout—Orford ma.

All Round Cord—Orford ma.

Swimmer—Field ma.

Tenderfoot—Segundo mi.

One Year's Service—Wynne, Homan, Grove, Johnston tert, Matthews ma.

F. G. E. FIELD,
Scout Master, Troop II.

THE CHAPEL.

Since our last issue a good deal of progress has been made with the seating of the Chapel. The ten main stalls have been in position now for some time and with the organ gallery give a very pleasing effect from the East End. The organ gallery continues to grow upon one, and in the opinion of many it is one of the most, if not the most successful thing in the whole building. Much of the other seating has come and by the end of term it will probably be completed. The pews have high backs and give a dignified appearance to the building, but it naturally requires the panelling and the remainder of the stalls to give the complete effect.

Another recent institution is the bell, which has been placed in the South turret. It is a 5 cwt. bell, 2ft. 5ins. in diameter, and gives the note of D. It has a fine, rich tone, which has been much admired and has all the characters of a Church bell. It was specially cast for the Chapel by Messrs. Mears and Stainbank, of Whitechapel Road, who have been making bells in the same spot for over three centuries. It bears the inscription:

"Ring in the Christ that is to be."

D.D. J.R.E. 1915.

It is rung from the small chamber on the South side of the West window.

It is hoped that the Chapel will be used early next term. The organ will not be moved until the Easter holidays, so that the singing at first will have to be unaccompanied.

LECTURE.

On the 3rd of November Mr. E. Corke gave a Lantern Lecture in the Big School on English Wild-flowers.

The lecturer prefaced his remarks by a short history of the systems of colour photography; all his slides were examples of this art, and had not been painted or retouched in any way. The first few slides were exceedingly effective examples of colour-photography as applied to landscape and flower studies. He disclaimed any intention to treat the subject of wild-flowers from a scientific or botanical point of view and dealt with only the best known and most common plants. His most interesting explanations were those of the curious and apparently useless developments of various plants' character, developments which on investigation prove to be essential to the survival of the plant. He explained the differences in size and shape of blossom and leaf and stem that seem so arbitrary, but have each and all some separate, distinct, and definite purpose of their own. He showed us why some of the leaves of the same tree may be small, to let light and air through to their brothers beneath, some large, to form a sort of gutter by which the rain is led to those places where the roots are nearest to the surface of the ground. He told us why the water-lilies have long frail tremulous leaf-fingers beneath the surface, and broad strong leaves above—why and how a berry is formed—why and how narcissus and daffodil, and all our best known flowers, from the rose to the clover, grow as they do. Finally, his slides illustrating protective mimicry, more especially a slide of the bee orchid, were extraordinarily effective.

DEBATING SOCIETY.

A meeting of the Society was held on Saturday, October 23rd, when the Rev. F. G. E. Field moved that "This House considers the development of Mechanical Science to be a curse rather than a blessing."

R. M. Baldwin spoke second, W. J. Colyer third, and D. C. P. Phelps fourth. There were nineteen other speakers.

The House divided as follows:—

For the Motion ... 22 votes.

Against the Motion.. 32 votes.

The Motion was therefore lost by ten votes.

A meeting of the Society was also held on November 20th, when T. H. Wintringham moved that "This House considers the Pen to be mightier than the Sword."

C. F. G. MacDermott spoke second, S. Humphries third, and H. V. S. Muller fourth. There were five other speakers.

The House divided as follows:—

For the Motion ... 17 votes,

Against the Motion... 14 votes.

The Motion was therefore carried by three votes.

SCHOOL LIBRARY.

The Committee has recently been increased by the addition of Mr. Greateorex, who has, moreover, again shown munificence to the Library by the presentation of 20 volumes of "Punch."

Other books have also been given by Mr. Osborne and Mr. Hammick; for which we are grateful. They are Democracy and the War, by various authors.

Achievements of Chemical Science, by J. C. Philip.

The new bookcases have now been placed in position, thus allowing both greater accessibility to certain books and room for expansion in other directions. With a view to the latter there are being obtained among the new books of this term some to start a section of works that deal with the Bible and kindred subjects. To the art section are added some practical works on ornament; while some other books increase the section on Travel. This latter is much in need of development; and any old Boys, or others, who may be wishful to help the Library with gifts, could not do better than give in this direction.

O.G. NEWS.

The following are extracts from letters with regard to the death of J. P. Phillimore, which have been received by his father:—

Letter from the Officer commanding 6th Batt., The Buffs, October 18th.

Dear Mr. Phillimore,

Under considerable stress, I am writing to tell you that our Phillimore was as gallant as any British Officer could be, and his loss to the Battalion will be hard to replace.

I thank God he has been buried within our lines, and that it will be possible to identify his grave.

Yours sincerely,

ARNOLD EATON,

Lt.-Col.,

Commanding 6th Buffs.

The Chaplain, 6th Battalion, The Buffs, wrote on October 18th.

"Our time together was not long, yet in it learned greatly to admire him, both as a soldier and as a Christian; and I always regarded him as one who ever pressed forward to the highest attainment.

"Some of our company, who were wounded, spoke with me in our Dressing Station, and they were full of praise for the calm and brave conduct he displayed, both before and during the engagement."

A fellow-officer, 2nd Lieut. Norman W. Birkett, wrote:—

"Your son, indeed, was a most admirable man. He had what is perhaps the greatest virtue among men, he was absolutely genuine. He was very brave and set a very good example of honest living to both officers and men."

The following is part of a letter received by Mrs. Halsey from the O.C. No 3 Trench Mortar Battery.

"Your son, 2nd Lieut. F. W. Halsey, was killed on Sunday, November 14th, at 4 p.m. by a shell which entered his dug-out. You have this consolation at any rate to know that he suffered no pain, for death was instantaneous. He was buried this morning, the 15th, at noon, borne to his resting place on a stretcher covered with the Union Jack and carried by members of the 3rd T. M. Battery. He is buried in Vermelles Cemetery.

"At all times and under all circumstances he showed a brave and indomitable spirit, combined with an energy and devotion to duty, which could not be excelled."

We reprint the following from a notice of F. W. Halsey in the Oxford Magazine of Dec. 2nd:—

"He was elected to a Demyship in Natural Science in 1912, being not only one of the best candidates in the Group-Competition, but also one of the youngest. It was considered advisable that he should stay down for another year at Gresham's School, where he had already assisted in a chemical research on which Mr. D. L. Hammick, his Science Master, and an ex-Demy, was then engaged. There he made such progress in advanced physical and organic chemistry as well as in mathematics, that on coming into residence in Oxford he could start on what was in effect third-year work, and in his first long vacation reap the benefit from a course of general practical work at a foreign University. His qualities were those which would have taken him far in his Science."

We have received the following from a correspondent:—

F. W. H.

Killed in Flanders, November 14th, 1915.

He has gone on.

For him no splendid comradeship in death
With heroes of high contests like the Marne;
Not his an end beneath a dawning sky
In some fierce fight more ultimate and easterly:
The world marks but another soldier dead,
The daily toll that keeps our Line inviolate.
But we who knew him here, who shared with him
The watches of another service, we see more.
His name upon our walls, imperishable,
Fragments he wrote, the work he did so well,
The shadow of his presence still with us,
Tell us of what he was and what he would have been.

It was with very keen regret that we heard of the death of G. B. Johnson. One who knew him well writes:—

"He brought with him to Gresham's School a sturdy robustness of body and mind, coupled with a shy modesty, and he soon acquired a leading position in his House and in the School. Before he left he was Captain of his House, a School Prefect and Captain of Football. His influence was the influence of a sterling character. His leadership was one that compelled by its simple straightforwardness, its unpretentiousness and its very essence of leadership—example."

Major Atkinson, commanding the 7th Norfolks, wrote:—

"I am deeply sorry to hear of your sad news to-day, and I write to sympathise with you in the loss of a good soldier. His loss will be deeply felt in the Regiment where comrades are working together for the Country, and in which so many good men have fallen. I knew your son very well indeed and I had the highest opinion of him. He did his work nobly and well, and I think that he was quite happy."

A fellow-officer, Lieut. L. C. Borthwick, wrote:—

"I am writing a few lines to you to offer my deepest sympathy in the great loss that you have sustained at the death of your son Geoffrey. I have been in his company since the Battalion was formed and always found him one of the best, and quite one of my best friends in the Regiment. He was simply loved by all from the lowest to the highest, but no one will miss him more than myself. I happened to be in the trenches when he was wounded, and at once went down to see if there was anything I could do. I found him badly hit but conscious. In spite of everything being done that was possible he died soon afterwards. He was perfectly calm and very brave the whole time. I need hardly tell you how deeply we all feel his loss, and we all are poorer by the loss of a true friend and a good soldier. We buried him the following day (Monday) at 3 o'clock, at Vermelles, in the British Cemetery."

Another Officer wrote:

"I would like to send you a few lines to say that there was not a man, N.C.O. or Officer who did not regard his loss as a personal one."

CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editor of "The Gresham."

Dear Sir,

I am frequently being asked whether all the money that is needed for the Chapel has been obtained. It may therefore be well to make the following statement, in round numbers, of the present position of the Chapel finances.

Receipts.

Chapel Fund—Paid ...	8900
Promised ...	600
War Memorial Fund ...	400
Old Boys' Fund ...	300
Balance required ...	2000
	<hr/>
	£12,200

Expenditure.

Building Contract ...	9350
Architect's and Surveyor's fees, Clerk of Works, etc.	1250
Organ Gallery ...	550
Stalls ...	200
Seating ...	850
	£12,200

It is clear from this that there is at present a deficit of £2,000, which the Chapel Committee will have to meet in some way.

The panelling, stalls, and screen, which have not so far been ordered, will cost an additional £800.

I am, yours truly,

J. R. ECCLES.
