NOTHING has done more to illustrate the duality of human nature than the present War. On the one hand are all the appalling stories of atrocities and cruelty; on the other the courage, the devotion, and that strange compound of mysticism and fatalism to which the war has given rise.

In the same way the issue of the war will be neither wholly good nor wholly evil, and in our hands lies the ultimate decision as to whether the war is to have a good or an evil effect on humanity. We can help this decision in two ways—by actually fighting and by exerting the force of public opinion in the right direction. The latter is an obligation of equal force to the former, since we who live in times when history is being made have unequalled opportunities for forming and directing public opinion.

To do this, above all we must realise the actuality of the war, and must think of it even more than we do at present—no easy task when we have practically no visible reminder before our eyes.

We must seek also to keep alive all the good that existed before the war, and to take advantage of all that which arises as a consequence of it.

As an instance of what may be done in this direction we would direct attention to a letter published in this number, in which an O.G., just about to go to the Front, suggests that the Old Boys should undertake the woodwork of the Chapel.

Such a suggestion embodies much of the good which may result from the war. Its value is twofold: first it would maintain one fine ideal which existed before the war, our aspiration to build and to worship in our own chapel; secondly it would be a memorial of the self-sacrifice of those O.G.'s who are serving in the war.

ROLL OF HONOUR.

KILLED IN ACTION.

Bernard Cornish, who was a Lance-Corporal in the Dragoon Guards, was killed in action on June 2nd. He entered the School in 1893 and left in 1898. After leaving School he went into business and, when the war broke out, he joined the Reserve Battalion of the Dragoon Guards. His Major, writing of his death, spoke of his gallantry and of the fact of his having been mentioned for further promotion.

ACCIDENTALLY KILLED.

Hedley Knowles, who was a Lieutenant in the 6th Battalion, West Riding Regiment was accidentally killed on May 30th. Born on February 13th, 1893, he entered the School in May 1907 and left in April 1910. On leaving School he went in for the Law and was studying for his final examination when the war broke out. He was gazetted 2nd Lieutenant in the 6th Battalion, West Riding Regiment, in 1913. He joined his Battalion on mobilisation and left for France with it in April. He was instructing at the School of bomb throwers and was killed by the premature explosion when a rifle grenade was fired.

G. F. Johnson, Lieut., 3rd Northumbrian Brigade, R.F.A.

A. J. D. Robinson, Lieut., 4th Batt., East Lancashire Regiment.

FROM THE FRONT.

Well, I was in the trench from Sunday night until Tuesday, June 30th, midnight, and quite enough it was, too, really, as I was up all night until after stand-down at 4.30, and on during the day for three hours every six hours.

There is a battery of guns just behind me, which is bursting my ear drums and making my head split. On Wednesday and Thursday they were chucking a lot of shrapnel over, and four rifle grenades exploded 6 feet from my dug-out, luckily in long grass, or they would have blown me to smithereens as I was just entering my dug-out in the approved fashion on hands and knees!

I went out in front of our trenches on Tuesday night through the barbed wire and long corn to see if we could find out what they were doing, as they were so quiet. The corporal and I got right up to the German barbed wire but could see or hear nothing; pretty queer work with bright white flares going up now and then, down flat on your stomach and on again; well, anyway, we got back safe.

On Thursday night I was sent for to go back to the old dug-out in the wood to take over command of the Reserve Machine Gun and the Reserve Company. I got back into the wood at about 2.30, taking the ration party back, and found the most awful dug-out reserved for me, clay walls dripping wet and only boughs overhead, which were a nest for mosquitos. I'd only got my burberry and leather, and I couldn't sleep for the damp. So I got the men on to it and made a real good dug-out with sandbags, and had my valise sent down. So I slept last night, I can tell you!—not only because of my valise, but because last night we had to do two journeys up and back to the fire trenches, first with rations and then, with the men already tired, when we got back at 12.30 to the battalion dumping ground I had to take them up again with what are called knife-rests. They are barbed wire entanglements 14 ft. long by about 3 or 4 ft. wide and high. The wire is entangled about long poles and pieces of wood. They can be carried by two men, but are very heavy. They have handles at each end.

Well, I had 8 of these, 6 men with trench boards, 5 ft. long by 2 ft. 6 in., quite heavy enough, and three boxes of ammunition. It was impossible to take these knife-rests along the communication trenches, as they wouldn't nearly go in, so I had to find my way across country under fire the whole time, right up to the first line trench, 75 yards from the Germans. I did it, and not a man was hit, but it was pretty hot. Two men refused to come out at first, and I had to threaten to shoot the first man who spoke; I couldn't see in the dark who it was. After the first minute I was in a funny sort of way exhilarated by it, and when I got to the end I found I was wet to the skin with perspiration. The men didn't know it was as bad as it was because I gulled them into thinking it otherwise, but I can tell you we were a cheery party going back after the strain.

G. M. G.

There are several rumours out to the effect that Austria has thrown up the sponge, Turkey is suing for peace, and that our Division is having a month's rest in a day or two. I hope they are all true. We also learn that Lancashire people are kicking up a row and smashing up the different armouries, because they will not issue the casualty list. We get very little sleep even in the third line of trenches. The last five nights I have been on duty practically the whole night through, and had to do the best we can in the day time.

T. G. H.

In the first boat of the first landing party and one of the first ashore he (E. G. White) seems to have fought with great gallantry. Wounded in the leg, he still carried on and not until his right arm was damaged by shrapnel did he fall out of the actual fighting line. He was still able to walk and had the use of his left arm, so devoted his energy to supplying ammunition. On his last journey back he came upon a man with half his foot blown off, so, throwing him on his shoulder, he carried him back to the hospital, a distance of two miles. He was so exhausted then by his great efforts and wounds that the Red Cross people would not let him return, but put him into the transport with the other wounded.

H. I. H.

It is generally accepted that the front line trenches are better because the support and reserve trenches get the daily shelling. In the front line trenches at least half the men must be awake and an officer on duty. Since there are only two of us in C Company we have to take four hour shifts and have a dog watch from 4 to 8 p.m. The day starts at 2.15 a.m., when all stand to for an hour. The men then get their breakfasts, and, if off duty, go to sleep. About a fifth of them are always busy with periscopes and the trenches can always be improved from inside and are dusted over with chloride of lime every morning before the flies get up. The Germans practically never give us anything to snipe at, so we have to amuse ourselves by breaking their periscopes. We have at last been given out orthoptic telescopic sights and the shooting we do with them would do Bisley credit. Every night the trenches are empty except for a sentry in each traverse. All the rest have to work. We have to have ration, sandbag, water and burial parties; men cutting the long grass in front so as to get a field of fire; also patrols and listening posts. If there are any men left over we get them to work on their own bit of parapet. The Germans send up a great many star lights, which hinder all work. I usually spend most of the night fixing up iron loopholes. These must be perfectly hidden or they are very dangerous. One night a brave German came to within 25 yards of our trench and gave us two bombs which, however, did no harm. The next night three of our bombers tried to do the same, but one of them was shot through the knee when within throwing distance and the other two spent the rest of the night in getting him in. When last in the trenches a boy in my company was shot through the head. It was on his 18th birthday. We are in reserve now, having a rest. All the men are trying to learn French. You hear them asking for "some dulay"; and "no compri" and "nar poo," (i.e., il n'y a plus), will be English words after the war. The other morning I heard my servant trying to ask for a frying pan, but with no success. He ended up by saying—"Don't you compri anything?" About three weeks before the joke in Punch a man wrote home—"Please send me something that will kill fleas. Keating's Powder is no bon, because they just put their respirators on."

G. D. H. A.

Doubtless you will remember the trenches lost at Ypres on Whit Monday. We had the honour of losing them. I say "honour," because I think the way our boys stuck the gas was really great. I was not in trenches at the time, but about 200 yards back in the dug-outs, and I got the gas later on. It was a dreadful day. We could not get any reinforcements up and the Prussians came on, but, when they got just behind the dug-outs, they stopped. If only they had known that we had only about half a battalion between them and Ypres, I guess the town would now be in German hands. But they did not know and, as we got the trenches back at night, it did not matter. There is, strictly speaking, no regiment of 7th D.L.I., as we lost 700 men.

A. S.B.

I don't know if I told you, but it was a series of escapes that afternoon, as two eight-inch shells burst within ten yards of me. I was about the only one not hit. I lost some of the truest and loyalest friends I ever had, two officers and a dozen men, besides nearly forty others badly hit in my company, and no officer ever had a finer lot. When things like that happen, it makes even some of the most unimaginative do some thinking.

M. C. C.

April 22nd.—About 6.30 p.m. odd French soldiers came along with scared looks and long stories of wonderful gases. Within about half an hour it was pretty obvious something was wrong. The French fugitives had increased to a constant stream, walking, running, riding on gun limbers (they had blown up all their guns) and crowded in carts. Soon they were pouring over the fields as well as the roads, followed by swarms of refugees trying to get their carts and stuff along in the crush. They had no officers and nothing seemed to have any power to stop them. We threatened to shoot them if they did not turn round, but they were absolutely off their heads. We dug ourselves in where we were, as they said the Germans were over the Canal and practically on us. After a little while a rumour got round that the Canadians had held them up and things quieted down again. At 12.30 p.m. we were marched off to join the rest of our Brigade about a mile further back.

April 23rd.—At about 10 o'clock our Brigade marched round to a village a mile or so behind the Yser Canal on the north side of the Ypres salient. We had lunch and, having dropped our packs in a barn, we continued to march up to the Canal. The other side of the Canal the Germans held a ridge about 1,200 yards away. In front of them were a few battered Canadians holding them up for the moment. Our Brigade was to push the Germans off the ridge while a regiment of Zouaves attacked them on the left. Our first two battalions crossed the Canal and opened out, and went straight away across the open towards the German trenches. The two other battalions, including ours, were in support and reserve. Of course the firing line was mown down by the fire from the ridge, but some of them got to the German trenches and turned them out completely with the result that, when the third battalion went over the same ground, they covered the whole of the 1,200 yards with only two casualties. At night we had to carry up stores and spent the rest of the time bringing in the wounded and clearing up a bit. This attack was really part of the Battle of Pilkem.

April 24th.—Two new French Regiments (6,000 men) came to relieve us. At 2 p.m. the battalion which had been in support the day before and our own were ordered to move off to the right. This was part of the support movement to the great counter attack at St. Julien which took place that evening. We moved along by fields and ditches, avoiding all roads and villages, and so managed to get up to within about a mile of our destination without any casualties. However, we then had to cross over a ridge in full view of the Germans and very soon we were being shelled as though it was hailing iron. Our destination was a long ridge running across between St. Julien and a village called Wieltze. At last we reached it (about 300 of us by then) and dug ourselves in and so managed to get a bit of cover. That was the afternoon when we lost about 100 men—all by shell fire. After I had got my men fairly well dug in, and with some sort of cover, I went along to some Canadians on our left, to find out where we were and what we were doing. Apparently we had been brought up as an auxiliary line. In front of us an open battle was being fought and we had been brought on to the ridges to keep the Germans back, while our men reformed, if they were driven right in past us. Soon after I got to these Canadians, a party of about 20 Germans began to run towards us across a field a few hundreds yards away. Of course, in a minute we had the Canadians' M.G.'s on to them and only about three ever got away. There were some others in a wood at the side and they kept running out to try and bring in the fellows we had shot, but, of course, it was sheer suicide. They were wonderfully brave and never gave up trying to reach them, until quite a number more had been hit. Soon after this we saw a Canadian Brigade advancing right across our front on the flank of St. Julien, which was full of Germans. The latter, however, did not wait for them, and in a few minutes the streets of the village were full of Germans running back to some trenches in a wood about half a mile behind. So the line was saved for a time and things quieted down. All that night we were directing Canadians back to the various H.Q.'s, as they came in, in little groups, without any idea where anyone else was. On the left of our trenches was a farm which had been used as one of the Canadian Brigades H.Q.'s. Of course, the German advance had brought this farm right into the firing line, so that it was now not only within artillery fire, but was under rifle fire from quite a close range. All day long we watched dispatch riders and orderlies running the gauntlet of bullets and shells on cycles, and horses and, although I never saw one of them hit, it was obviously an impossible state of affairs. This also occurred to the Germans, and at 6 p.m. they began to bombard the farm. They threw seventy-two 6-inch shells into that farm in 20 minutes, and at the end one half was on fire and the other half was in absolute ruins. It was the most appalling bombardment I have ever seen. The first 10 shells had made the place absolutely uninhabitable, but still they plugged them in out of sheer "frightfulness." Everybody within miles who saw that bombardment always speaks of it with a sort of awe. Curiously enough, although the place was full of men belonging to the H.Q. Staff, they were nearly all of them able to get away, though, of course, they lost all the stores. In fact all through the night we could hear ammunition going off as box after box caught fire. About 12 of us, mostly Canadians, managed to get a lot of boxes of ammunition and various bikes and motor bikes out of the farmyard after the bombardment, before they got properly in the fire, but it was hot enough even there and we soon gave up all idea of getting near the stuff inside the barns.

Early the next morning, as the line in front was now quite firmly held, and there was no immediate prospect of the Germans getting through there, we were withdrawn from the ridge and were lucky enough to be allowed to rest for 3 days. That was what we saw of the Battle of St. Julien.

REMARKS.

The end of each summer term naturally sees the corps at its best. This year we may well look for a greater keenness, smartness, and general efficiency than ever; on the whole, we are not disappointed. Among the rank and file we find general military knowledge at a very creditable level; field work, as we have right to expect from the time that has been devoted to field days, is certainly better than it has ever been hitherto. All ranks have profited enormously by the tactical problems that the war-scarred area about Warren Farm has been made to yield. The vital importance of efficient reconnaissance and trustworthy communications has impressed itself again and again; consciousness that concentration and conservation of forces for use at the vital spot and at the critical moment is the decisive factor for success has solaced many a dull hour in reserve or support. The detached party and the dramatic but entirely unsupported flanking movement have lost much of their seductiveness, disaster having demonstrated their futility. We must not forget, however, one memorable occasion when a party of five counterfeited with great guile and slimness the Massenschlag of at least two sections through Hundred Acre Wood, the real attack being ultimately launched from an entirely different direction.

Detestation of good cover and a happy gregariousness under fire still mar the effectiveness of firing lines and try the tempers of umpires. Nevertheless, we believe that the briefest acquaintance with the real thing is sufficient to induce a perfect passion for cover and a cold exclusiveness that leaves nothing to be desired.

Initiative on the part of section and group leaders has developed very successfully. Occasionally we find a section commander content to sit still and do nothing, or laboriously applying the methods of trench warfare to the abolition of a stray scout. But on the whole we think the tendency is rather towards the other extreme. Too often patrols and even points and flank guards have but to catch one glimpse of an enemy to be seized with a mad desire to rush upon him immediately and anyhow. This manoeuvre is intended, we understand, to represent a charge.

Twice this term the Corps has taken part in operations with the Cyclist detachment stationed in Holt. It is much to be regretted that these occasions have been so few in number.

Close order work, stimulated by the prospect of the Straight Shield Competition and Inspection, has as usual improved during the term. In our opinion the word of command is not up to the usual standard reached by our N.C.O's., nor has the Company succeeded so far in acquiring a smart quickstep. Probably these deficiencies are an inevitable result of the loss of Sergeant Steer. The Corps has improved in smartness and steadiness on parade and we could look forward to the Inspection with fair complacency but for one thing. No soldier who inspects the corps can fail to be unfavourably impressed by the laxity in some quarters as to the length of the hair.

On speech day the Corps paraded for Inspection by Sir Edward Busk. Driving rain and half a gale from the north made the proceedings somewhat trying. The Band particularly should be congratulated on a good performance under the worst conditions; the big drummer, whose duties are always onerous, found himself confronted by an aerodynamical problem of considerable complexity and acquitted himself nobly. Sir Edward Busk, in a letter to Major Miller, wrote.—

"As the storm yesterday prevented me from saying anything to you and the Cadets, I write a few words to let you and them know how pleased and satisfied I was with their appearance and demeanour under such trying circumstances. Satisfied as I am and have been all my life that it is the duty of every boy and man to have a military training, whether he intends to follow the military profession or not, and that such training is also of great personal benefit to every one, I was delighted to find that our School furnishes so large and efficient a Corps."

Those Scouts in the choir had a successful choir holiday on Salthouse Heath, cooking their own dinner and tea from raw materials purchased previously by themselves. Only one was on the sick list next day; post hoc, ergo—?

We have had several days of extended operations on bicycles, and in consequence have learnt much of the roads, paths, woods and heaths of certain areas.

Many of the troop are arranging to do various forms of "War Service" during the holidays.

D. A. WYNNE WILLSON,

Scout Master, Gresham's School I.

TROOP II.

The following Badges have been won :

Electrician—R. P. Homan, H. W. Baker, H. A. Orford, C. W. F. Rhodes.

Interpreter—R. P. Homan, D. W. Pye.

Naturalist—D. W. Pye.

Ambulance—D. W. Pye.

Musician—R. W. Henry.

Friend to Animals—H. A. Orford.

H. W. Baker and G. A. C. Field have passed all required for the Swimmer's Badge, except picking up objects, for which there has as yet been no opportunity. Much useful work has been done in learning the five methods of Rescue from Drowning as laid down by the Royal Life-Saving Society, and a good many should now be able to obtain the Rescuer's Badge. Methods of release and resuscitation have also been practised.

Mr. Cooke, whom we are glad to welcome as Assistant Scout Master, has organised several signalling parties, messages being sent round a complete chain of signallers, and has taken cycling parties both for concealment and the finding of the concealed in a given area. Thanks to Major Miller we have been allowed to accompany the O.T.C. on field days, and the Scouts have proved themselves very useful in signalling, and carrying messages and getting information—in which they have been extremely active.

F. G. E. FIELD,

Scout Master, Gresham's School II.

The following letter was received after the Inspection on July 17th, :—

Sheringham Hotel,

July 18th, 1915.

Dear Wynne Willson,—

Before leaving for London I must write a few lines to you as Scout Master of Troop I. to express something of what I should have said yesterday to you, to the Rev. F. G. E. Field, to your assistant Scout Master, to the patrol leaders and to the Scouts, if the weather had not been so forbidding. First let me thank you and all of them for turning out in full numbers, undaunted by the storm, and thus giving me the pleasure of seeing them drill. They seemed to me to be as efficient as they were numerous, and I must congratulate you and them on their appearance, of which you will be proud.

The movement has my heartiest sympathy and support. It is one of the most beneficial, not only to those who take part in it, but to our country at large, promoting as it does the maintenance and growth of efficiency, of rapid and accurate observation, of prompt and decisive actions involving individual and independent judgment, and of helpfulness to others. With many thanks and congratulations,

I am, yours very truly,

EDWARD H. BUSK,

Major.

SPEECH DAY.

Speech Day this year was held on Saturday, July 17th, when Her Grace the Duchess of Hamilton and Brandon distributed the prizes in the Big School. No invitations had been issued, so there were very few visitors present and the room was occupied almost entirely by the boys, who were in uniform. There was a large gathering of Governors on the platform, and, in spite of the fact that it had been announced that there would be no speaking, several speeches, for the most part short and informal, were delivered.

Sir Edward Busk opened the proceedings with a short speech in which he referred to some of the events of the past School year. He made special reference to the First Class in the History Final Schools which Herron won a year ago, and to the loss the School had sustained in his death at Neuve Chapelle. He also expressed the thanks of all to the Duchess of Hamilton for coming to distribute the prizes.

The Headmaster, who followed, said:—

"Twelve of our old boys have given their lives for England. Nothing I can say will increase the honour they have won, nor lessen the sorrow of those who are left. The honour we inherit—the sorrow we fain would share.

I shall be glad to be empowered by a show of hands to send a message of sympathy to Cecil Graves, one of the 39 prisoners upon whom reprisals fell.

L. N. Aveling, W. G. Chapman, H. E. Chapman and H. J. H. Cox have been mentioned in Dispatches, and B. B. Winter has won the Ordre Militaire Français.

I ask you to give three cheers for Captain Foster, Captain Vivian Smith, Major Kentish Wright and Lieut. Walsh. You all know how welcome will be the day that brings them back to us.

There must be many a fine band of Old Boys from many a school, who have given up everything to serve England, but to our eyes it seems impossible that there could be quite such a fine band as ours.

In the haunting oppression of the war they are seldom far from the fore-front of our thoughts—

We do not forget.

I want you to send to them, on the wings of a ringing cheer, the message of our pride in them, and our hope for the honour that is their due and our longing for their safe return."

The Duchess then presented the prizes in accordance with the following list:—

The proceedings ended with the usual cheers, and the singing of "God Save the King."

EXHIBITION.

It was a fruitful inspiration that suggested there should be an Exhibition of models, paintings, toys, made by members of the School, to be sold for the Chapel Fund. The result, upwards of £12, must be very gratifying to all who contributed.

There was an astonishing array. Pearson Gee's models of machine guns and other warlike equipment were the most striking, and readily fetched good prices.

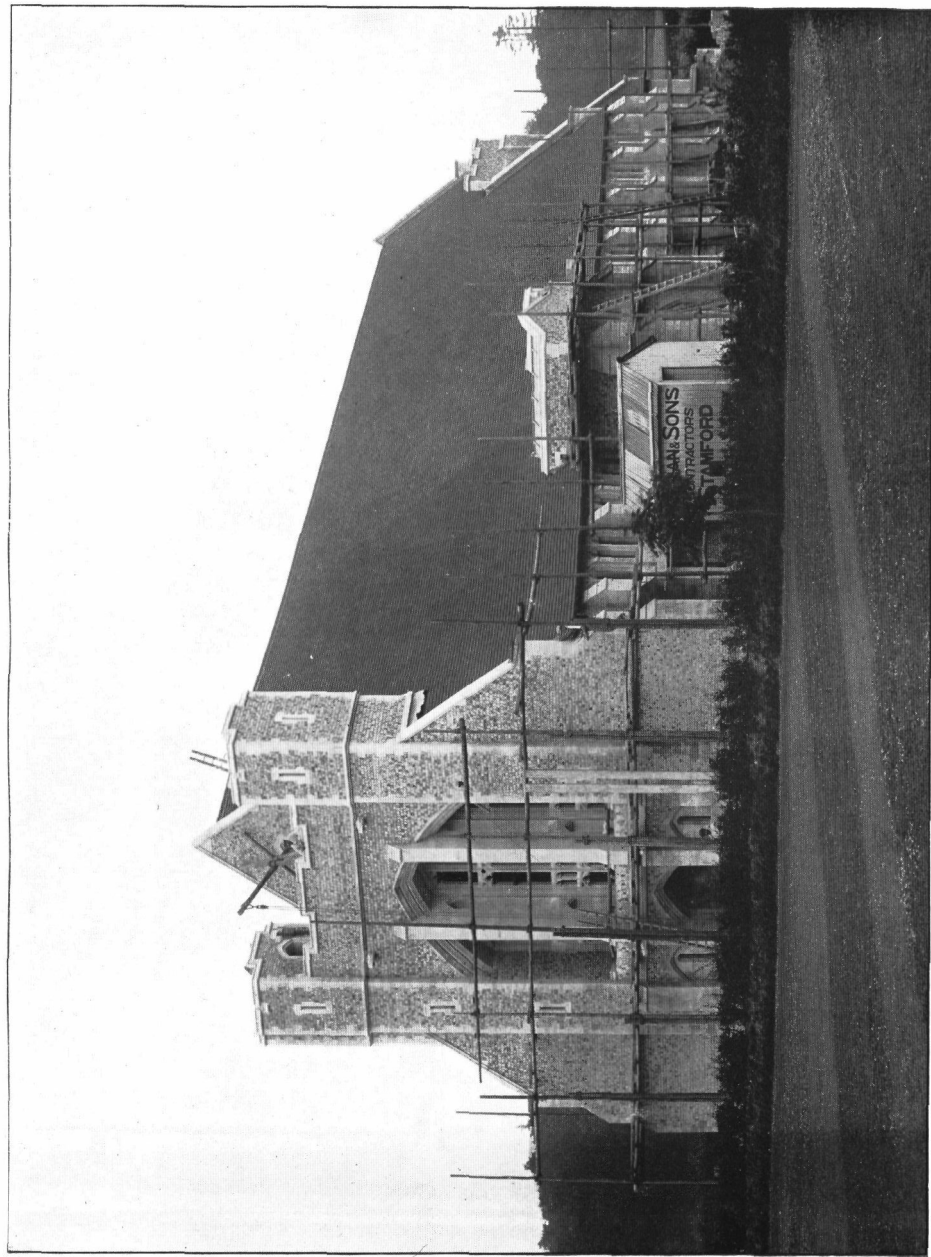

The models made by members of Forms I. and II., illustrative of the history which they have read, made an imposing show, Norman Castle and Abbey jostling with Ducking Stools and Viking Ships.

A large number of paintings bore witness to the diligence of the painting class, and among them was some very promising work. These sold well and deservedly so. There were also machine drawings and maps, as well as other exhibits. Altogether it was a decided success and we hope it may become an annual fixture.

THE CHAPEL.

The photograph, which we reproduce on the opposite page, shows that the exterior of the building is, to all intents and purposes, completed. The West Front, with its two towers, has more than justified our expectations, and a fine view of the School grounds is obtained from the parapet between the towers, which is reached by a narrow staircase up the North tower. The Porch is also a most gratifying feature and there is an attractive little music room in the upper part of it, leading into the organ gallery. The window in the bay which contains the organ gallery has been lowered and presents an interesting view of the distant woods on entering through the Porch. The original window in this bay has been blocked up with stone.

In the interior much has been done since we last wrote about the Chapel. The main plastering is finished, the aisle and Ante Chapel have been paved with stone flags and the tiers are ready for the oak blocks. The aisle is a wide one, no less than 9 feet. The organ gallery has been begun and there is some splendid oak for it. As far as we can judge at present it is going to be just as good as the rest of the building, and that is saying a great deal. Anyhow it is good enough to whet our appetite for more and makes us very eager to go on with as much of the woodwork as possible. This is, it need hardly be said, merely a matter of finance. Cheques are coming in, one the other day for £25 from "An O.G. officer" who wishes, at present, to remain anonymous, and we hope that many others will shortly follow the example of those who have already responded so generously. It would be a grand thing, when the war is over and the formal ceremony is held, to have the oak work, both panelling, stalls and seating, complete.

THE CHAPEL, JULY 10TH, 1915.

SCHOOL LIBRARY.

This term has been chiefly marked by gifts of books from the donors mentioned below, to whose generosity we are greatly indebted. Nothing can help the Library more than gifts judiciously chosen in accordance with its needs.

It may be of interest to record that the number of books is now approaching 1500, of which more than 200 have been added since last summer. In the total are not included many of obsolete interest; nor the Old Library, of some 150 works, mostly classical.

To ease continuous expansion two more bookcases have been ordered, which will be placed in the Upper Corridor.

O.G. NEWS.

An officer holding high command in the 6th Battalion, West Riding Regiment, wrote of H. Knowles, who was killed accidentally in France:—

"We are greatly grieved, as he was a great favourite with both officers and men. Quiet, unassuming, there was no better officer in my regiment, and none who took a greater interest in his work. He was an excellent soldier and a thorough sportsman. He knew no fear."

One of his fellow officers, Lieutenant Anthony Slingsby, wrote of him:—

"He was a fellow of whom the School might well be proud—a good and keen officer and a man who never showed fear. His men were really devoted to him and the regiment were very sorry to lose him. He was killed by the premature explosion of a bomb, when he was teaching some of the men of the Brigade Grenade Company. For my own part, the loss is very great. I have known him all his life."

We congratulate W. G. Chapman and H. J. H. Cox most heartily upon being mentioned in Despatches.

We have received the following account of the incident in which H. J. H. Cox distinguished himself:—

On the 18th of December the 2nd Devons were ordered to make an attack at dusk on a moated farm house and the enemy's entrenchments round it. Lieutenant Cox during the afternoon, under most difficult conditions caused by barbed wire, made a very valuable reconnaissance of the ground between the regiment and the enemy. When the attack was made he led the first platoon and, when working round the moat, was wounded, but continued to lead until the trenches were captured, and the object of the attack achieved

His Captain in a letter said "We started from our trenches just as it was getting dark, Cox leading the first platoon with great dash."

S. R. E. Davies is with the 2nd Unit, First Field Hospital, Skoplje, Serbia.

F. V. Jacques, R.N.V.R., who has been a sub-lieutenant on H.M.S. Birmingham, for the last ten months, has recently been permitted to leave his ship so that he may continue his medical career, there being a considerable likelihood of a shortage of doctors in the near future.

T. W. G. Acland has been seconded from the London Electrical Engineers and has gone to Oldbury, Birmingham, with other Chemists to study the preparation of high explosives.

F. C. Sutton has accepted a five years' engagement as Chemist at the works of Messrs. Chance & Hunt, (Government Department), Oldbury, near Birmingham, who are manufacturing high explosives.

C. G. Tyce has joined the Inns of Court O.T.C.

J. N. W. A. Procter is signalling officer to his Battalion.

G. R. Ellingham, J. C. M. Kirk, D. S. Anderson, E. C. Steven, and J. H. Barker have arrived in England with the new Canadian Contingent and are now in camp near Folkestone.

M. E. F. Shuttleworth is doing Government work on Munitions at Armstrong Whitworth's.

H. C. Hotblack, who has been serving with the South African Forces, has come over to England to take a Commission.

J. L. Smart, after serving in the Argentine, came back to England and enlisted in the 3rd Artists' Rifles.

T. G. Hyde, who has been with the 9th Battalion, Manchester Regiment, in the Gallipoli Peninsula, is now at the Island of Imbros, due west of Cape Helles, where there is a Rest Camp for the Expedition. He is acting as Landing Officer.

H. A. Busk is an Instructor at the Royal Flying School, Upavon, Salisbury Plain.

C. G. Graves, who was in solitary confinement in the Magdeburg prison, is back now at his former camp at Halle, where "he can be out of doors all day, and is able to get into quite good condition, as they play a good game of rounders each day and a sort of squash racquets against a wall."

H. M. Webb, in October last, took an Honours B.Sc. at London, in Chemistry and Bacteriology, and in January went to Millbank, the H.Q. of the R.A.M.C., as a civilian chemist in the Hygiene Department. He expects to be gazetted shortly.

The Rev. C. C. W. Trendell has been appointed to a curacy at St. Margaret's Church, Lowestoft.

The English Literature Society has also benefited by her interest, and is grateful to her for a delightful meeting held in the garden of "The Grove."

Mrs. Chapman has very kindly given the School large scale maps of the various theatres of the war. These maps are hanging now in the Upper Corridor.

Mr. A. C. Parkes has kindly presented the Corps with twelve trenching tools.

On Saturday, July 10th, Mr. Frank George gave a Lantern Lecture on the work of the Universities' Mission to Central Africa.

The Bishop of Norwich will hold a Confirmation on Sunday, Nov. 7th.

CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editor of "The Gresham."

Dear Sir,—

I find it difficult, at a moment when one's Regiment is just leaving England, to write the type of letter I should wish to write. In times such as these all O.G.'s cannot help thinking of the School which some of us will never see again. In spite of having little time for thought one cannot help realising how little we have really done or can do for the School which has made us what we are. The Chapel has not really been the way we have expressed that feeling—it ought to have been. It has been a combined effort; if it had been entirely our work we should have been even more proud of it than we are. One must be frank in these days. The War Memorial should be a thing apart from us. Our friends and relations will see to that.

We do want, however, to leave a lasting memorial of our respect and devotion which we usually find so difficult a matter to express.

Most of us, as soldiers, have been turned out of our ordinary course of life. We have lost many of our old financial responsibilities. In such a time we would do our work without pay. We ought not to lose this opportunity—it will never come again—of expressing our affection for the school.

Let us then undertake something definite—say the seating of the Chapel or some certain part of it. Had I been remaining in England I should like to have written personally to many O.G.'s about this scheme, but under the circumstances I must leave it to better hands to carry on.

I am, sir,

G. V. HOTBLACK. Captain.

9th Bn. The Welsh Regt.
