

THE GRESHAM.

Vol. VI.

JULY 29th, 1916.

No. 12.

EDITORIAL.

WITH this number is concluded the sixth volume of the Gresham, and also the first volume completed during War-time. In years of peace few people imagined that the next European War could last for more than a few weeks; and yet to-day it is still possible to say that another volume will be well on its way before the end is even in sight.

To some this number is a more definite landmark—to those who are about to go out from the School. To them the nevermore of school-time, once a golden vision, now a persisting sense of pain, has come. It is true that the Spirit of the Great Adventure is beckoning; it is true that Life and Death are calling; but there is an insistent reluctance to snap the threads of the past.

But with all wishes of success to the long line of future editors, we pass on to those who have preceded us, and who are already doing their duty in the wider sphere. That they are doing their duty is made clear when it is found that eighty-six per cent. of those who have been in the Corps are now serving in the Army or Navy. We may well be proud of our Old Boys.

ROLL OF HONOUR.

KILLED IN ACTION.

Cuthbert Alexander Hill, who was a Midshipman on H.M.S. Invincible, was killed in action at the Jutland Battle on May 31st. Born on October 10th, 1897, he entered the School in September, 1907, and left in July, 1915. He was a House and School Prefect. He passed into the Navy by the Special Entry and went to Keyham in September, 1915; he passed out in January, 1916. He was appointed to the Invincible, which he joined on February 2nd, 1916, and went down with his ship in the Jutland Battle.

George John Fenchelle, who was a 2nd Lieutenant in the Sussex Regiment, was killed in action in France on June 30th. Born on February 11th, 1895, he entered the School in January, 1911, and left in December, 1913. He was a House and School Prefect. On leaving School he went into a business house in Petrograd, but returned to England in November, 1914, to take a commission. He was gazetted to the 9th Service Battalion of the Sussex Regiment and went out to the front with them in March, 1916. He was attached to the 11th Intelligence Corps for a time, but about a month before his death he went back to his battalion.

FROM THE FRONT.

A short rainy season has come and gone and still a good breeze remains. When that goes I tremble to imagine what there will be to fire the vital spark and keep it in at all. As I said, it rained and the thunder roared in such a blast of sound that the throbbing of the air broke the shells of the tortoises and the lightning sparked and forked all over the sky, as if the flare of it could never be gone again; while the rain--well, our subaltern from Canada said it was as bad as a cloud-burst in B.C.; and I cannot devise a greater superlative, for I have neither seen, nor heard tell, of anything else that is not dwarfed to the size of a bacillus by the corresponding event as seen by our subaltern in B.C.

I spent a night when I was inoculated (fifth instalment), grappling with my shuddering tent-pole, trying to hold down the streaming bivouac and to keep my blankets dry.

Success was very partial, but I found a dry tunic at the bottom of the pile of blankets, and I slept in that. The rain comes only in thunderstorms. The last one lasted 45 minutes with a very grievous hail. There is a trickling stream, two feet wide near our camp, and we are on no great watershed. After the storm I stood on a rock overlooking this stream, marvelling to see it 50 yards wider and 20 feet deep. While I was there a trickle of water got round the rock behind me, and I retreated just in time, for the river rose 4 feet in 10 seconds. Higher up a line of six waggons and mules were crossing. The first crossed with comfort, but the last with four mules were washed down over the rocks. I have often wondered how it was that in more mountainous places I have passed a dry river bed 75 yards wide every quarter of a mile. The matter is solved.

As to flies. The top of my bivouac is the colour of oven flues. Black it is with their bodies. As I write they crawl over the back of my hand. And the other insects! I saw just now a snapdragon; it was flying with a bumble-bee in its mouth and a big beetle in the pincers of its tail.

I nearly caught some Uhlans the other day, and would have done, if the man on the telescope had not declared them to be our next patrol—which was very disappointing, as I have so much wanted to have a helmet before the tits stop nesting.

Now I am in a Rest Camp, and all day long we do elementary drill, so that the most seasoned warrior shall not "right turn" without the proper movement of the left heel.

W. D. B.

I am writing this from the trenches. Things are not nearly so quiet here as they were a month ago! At present there is a battery of ours strafing the Bosches just over our heads and they are replying with heavy stuff away to the right. Our aeroplanes are very much the master of the Bosche now. There is one going backwards and forwards now only about 500 feet up just over one's head: Fritz poops off his machine guns at it, but seems to miss it every time. The trenches up here are very wet in parts, well above the knees in liquid mud, and have also been knocked about a good deal from the show on July 1st. I was not in that myself, I am sorry to say, but with another officer was kept back in reserve. Our regiment did very good work, but suffered heavy casualties. I cannot say very much about the business, but I think the papers will probably mention us again for tough work. The Corps Commander came up two days after the push to speak to the battalion himself. Our losses in officers have been especially heavy, and I think there must have been special snipers told off for the job. I am at present commanding a company as we are so short. The wounded are still coming in from "No Man's Land" even now. One came in the night before last after being out ten days. He was hit in four places, but his wounds were healing well and he seemed quite cheery. Apparently he had been living on the rations of those killed out there. It is almost incredible that he should have lived through it, as both sides pump shells into "No Man's Land" hard daily. It seems terrible to think of the wounded lying out so long, but it is impossible to find them all there. These steel helmets that we wear now are very good indeed and have saved any number of lives.

C.A.M.

C. A. H.

Memory will long mark the charm of May, 1916, with a white stone, and few at Holt will easily forget the week in which Cuthbert Hill was amongst us "on leave."

Even those who had not known him before were glad to see him. He was good to look on and his face faithfully mirrored his character.

Few records can be as fair as his.

As a House Prefect and as a School Prefect his judgment was valued because it implied clearness and justice. His word was the word of an Englishman. His selflessness, his silent influence, were remarkable. He knew what was right and did it.

Many heroic deeds were done in the battle of Jutland, and it is certain that not the least heroic part was played by the Invincible, whose officers and men faced certain death and met it with the gallantry of which the Empire is justly proud.

THE JUTLAND BATTLE.

H.M.S. COLOSSUS,
FIRST BATTLE SQUADRON,
June 6th, 1916.

I will give you a rough idea of the action from what I saw of it from my Turret.

During the afternoon I was awakened from "40 winks" by action being sounded off. Of course I knew it was only to get things ready and see everything in working order before we met the enemy. Signals were coming through all the time telling us what was going on, and so I had plenty of time to think about it before we ever heard the sound of firing.

Everyone was very cheerful, and no one seemed in any way frightened. The mist was very thick and my first sight of anything was the Battle Cruisers engaging the enemy. The flashes from the enemy's guns were plainly visible through the mist, but I couldn't see any of their ships. Shortly afterwards the Battle Cruisers passed ahead of us, and we sighted the "Rostock," one of Germany's latest Cruisers. She was already damaged, but still firing at us. We gave her something to think about and she disappeared in the mist and was sunk by one of our ships astern. The next ship we saw was, I think, the "Elbing," but I can't say for certain. Anyhow she was a light cruiser with three funnels. She was burning heavily when I first saw her, and stopped, so I think she was sinking. We opened fire at once, and she was absolutely enveloped in smoke, only her funnels and masts visible when we finished firing. A ship astern fired at her afterwards, and I saw her three funnels go down. So we knew her fate.

We saw nothing for a short time. Then four Destroyers shot out of the mist and attacked the Fleet, but they had no luck. One torpedo passed about twenty yards ahead of us and was only avoided by altering course. We engaged one and she blew up in a cloud of blue smoke. None of them returned to tell the tale, but I gave them full marks for attacking us as they did. They came within 5,000 yards, fired all their torpedoes, but fortunately none hit.

Shots were still falling everywhere from other ships fighting, and two or three fell very close to us, but where they came from I don't know. Probably "overs" or ricochets from their High Sea Fleet firing at our Cruisers which were between the two main Fleets.

There was another lull in the action from my point of view, and we were waiting for something to come along when I happened to be looking through my glasses at the mist, and a German Super-Dreadnought suddenly came looming out of a patch of fog. She fired straight at us before we got our guns to bear on her, and at very close range, so close that I thought she couldn't miss. I heard them pass over my Turret, and I knew that she had missed us. We opened fire then, hitting her with two salvos of five guns. 4250 lbs. of Lyddite hitting her at once, and it was glorious to see her shake and burn as we hit her! She turned away from us then, having had enough, and when I last saw her she was disappearing in the mist, burning furiously from her conning tower to her stern, and I think she was awash right aft. Anyhow she never got back. A friend of mine in a ship just ahead of us told me he was watching this ship all the time, and he says we had the narrowest shave of any other ship in the Grand Fleet!! She fired three salvos at us, but had no luck! I got some spray all over my face from the splash made by the fall of her shots just ahead of us, so I know we nearly got it. It is believed that this ship was Germany's latest Dreadnought, the "Ersatz Wurth," and was disabled by us.

A certain Vice-Admiral said that this ship is "Britain's tiredest Dreadnought," and it is very nice to think that Britain's tiredest Dreadnought sunk Germany's latest.

I can't say what has been done to the British Fleet, but there is one thing, the Grand Fleet could go to sea now in the same condition as it did last Tuesday!

Last week was rather strenuous on the whole. The unfortunate thing about the Navy is that we have to coal and ammunition ourselves. There is no A.S.C. in the Navy to do it for us.

I don't think I have any more news for you, except that I hear Jellicoe estimates Germany's losses as two to our one.

LESLIE FARMER,
Sub.-Lieut., R.N.

A FIGHT IN THE AIR.

He had been up that morning on his usual patrol over the German lines and was not supposed to go up again that day. But that evening they wanted to spot the exact position of a German anti-aircraft gun, which was about five miles behind the German lines, so he went up again with Capt. Lucas as observer. In order to spot this gun it was necessary to draw their fire upon themselves. Whilst they were doing this they were both so intent looking down over the side of the aeroplane and watching the flashes as the gun fired at them, that they never saw a Fokker, which must have been above them, until it swooped down on them and fired a drum of bullets into them at close quarters.

Poor Capt. Lucas was so badly injured that he must have died almost at once. Fortunately only one bullet struck Olive, going through his back and lung, and breaking his right collar bone.

He was five miles from our lines and there was a strong wind against him, and to make matters worse the next volley put his engine out of running so that he was completely at the mercy of the Fokker, which was a much faster machine than his, even if his engine had been running. Fortunately he was very high up and his only chance was to vol-plane down to our lines and trust that he might get there without being killed. But he told me he was quite sure his end had come, for it seemed impossible to escape with the Fokker on his heels pumping bullets into him all the way. He says he dived and side-slipped and zig-zagged about like a snipe to escape the Fokker and took risks that he would not have dreamed of in ordinary times, but it was his only chance of escape. The wonder is that the machine did not collapse with the tremendous strain put upon it, for many of the stays and wires were cut away by the bullets. It must have been a pretty bad 10 or 12 minutes for him, but I think during the last part of the time he was hardly conscious of what was happening, for he thought that the Germans had not fired on him as he passed over their trenches, whereas he was told afterwards that he was received by them with a perfect hail of bullets and shrapnel. He eventually came down behind our lines, never having been again touched, though his map in front of him was riddled with bullets. On landing he at first tried to help Lucas, but, with only one arm and his strength nearly gone, he could do nothing, and poor Lucas was practically dead, so he started for one of our batteries, near which he had come down, to get them to send and bring this machine in before the Germans could shell it, but he must have collapsed almost at once and become unconscious. It is a miracle that he escaped with his life.

Contributed:—

By reason of recent legislation, O.T.C.'s. must now perforce pay special attention to the training of senior members, who obtain one year's exemption from Military Service provided that they are doing valuable work in their Corps. We have, therefore, this term, had a Special Class, of boys born in 1898 and 1899, in order that they can learn some more advanced work. Major Miller has been lecturing on general tactics and has also been training some Company Scouts. Mr. Partridge has been instructing the Class in the Guards' Drill, so that they in turn may teach it to the whole Corps; while Mr. Hammick has been specialising in the same way upon up-to-date Musketry.

The special work done by the Class has of course reacted on the Corps. All members now may see how truly ignorant any Cadet must be while he only spends a couple of lackadaisical hours on parade each week. Which is a long step towards proficiency. There has been more general evidence of intelligent interest, a marked gain in precision in the word of command, and an increase of keenness on details of drill and general smartness in the rank and file. One result has been to bring into greater prominence the slacker whose object is to do as little as he can, the would-be decorative creature who rejoices more in his flowing locks than in military smartness, the sloven who is content to slouch when others march, and the dreamy youth who will not concentrate on the work in hand. The Corps would, no doubt, be improved by the elimination of these; but it is our duty to educate them; and their number, always small, grows daily less. In this direction, as in others, the initiative of N.C.O.'s. might well be more fully extended, as at present there is still too great a tendency to study the delinquent's feelings.

BOY SCOUTS.

TROOP I.

There has been little doing this term mainly owing to the weather. In contrast to last year, few badges have been won, but I think this side of Scouting was almost overdone last year. Still, I should have liked to see more Second Classes and some attempt at a First Class or two.

On Thursday, June 15th, we went over to Sheringham and, with Troop II., some Sea Scouts (from the Coast Patrols) and some local Scouts, formed a Guard of Honour to the Lord Mayor of London on his visit to open an Orphanage.

On Thursday, July 13th, we had a good field day with Troop II., reproducing the tactics of Majuba Hill on a hill near "Butterfly" Woods.

Otherwise we have not this year been out with Troop II., though we have met them successfully on the Cricket field.

Sanderson, Donkin and Berkeley have passed Second Class.

Sanderson won the Ambulance badge and Gooch the Pathfinder's.

The Troop numbers 47. Patrol officers are as follows:—

Leader:—	Second:—
Woodpigeons—J. C. S. Daly.	D. P. R. Sanderson.
Wolves—A. C. Maynard.	G. N. Stilwell.
Peewits—C. V. Seagram.	A. E. Bernard.
Lions—H. K. Bagnall-Oakeley.	C. W. H. Gurney.
Storks—D. Johnston.	G. C. Knight
Owls—F. S. L. Gooch.	J. F. E. Gillam.

I hope to see next term a revival of the keenness and activity of a year or so ago.

D. A. WYNNE WILLSON,
Scout-Master, Troop I.

TROOP II.

In Troop II. there are only enough for two Patrols.

Leader:—	Second:—
Hawks—G. Lloyd.	G. A. C. Field.
Swifts—T. E. Matthews.	F. J. Curtis.

The work done has consisted of life-saving drill, practice in concealment, in defending and working through defended positions, and tracking on bicycles. Expeditions have been made to Muckleburgh Hill and Hundred Acre Wood. Ten boys have received the one year service badge.

THE CHAPEL.

The organ, which was first used in the Chapel on Ascension Day, has made a wonderful difference to the services. The building is undoubtedly a very fine one to sing in, and the School are singing as they have never done before. Let us hope that the present high standard will be permanently maintained.

The organ itself sounds very well, some of the new stops being particularly attractive. Mr. Greatorix has given us a good idea of its powers by a series of six organ recitals on Sunday afternoons, which have been greatly appreciated by the School. One recital was devoted to English organ music, another to French organ music, and a third to the works of J. S. Bach. Mr. Southward assisted at two of the Recitals, and played pieces by Max Bruch, Bach and Tschaikowsky.

The voluntary labourers at the Chapel, under Rowntree's direction, have been doing some very valuable spade work, and, thanks to them and the paid labour, the most important parts of the Chapel roads are completed. The levelling of the ground is also getting on, and we look forward to seeing it sown with grass in the autumn. The removal of the heaps of stones to form the foundation of the roads, and the making of the roads themselves, have already added not a little to the appearance of the building. This will be still more the case when the grounds are completely laid out, and trees and creepers planted.

There is at present a debt of about £1500 on the Chapel, which is being met with a loan. During the last six months money has been coming in at the rate of about £100 a month. If this can be maintained we may hope to see the deficit removed by the beginning of 1918. It is not till then that we shall be in a position to consider the completion of the wood-work, which includes the panelling, the remainder of the stalls, and the screen and the oak doors; so that our present obligation is perfectly clear, namely, to raise the £1500 as soon as we can. Subscriptions to any of the Funds help towards this end, whether they be to the Chapel, War Memorial, Old Boys, or School Seating Fund.

THE ORCHESTRA.

The concert of Saturday, July 15th, had two outstanding features—it consisted chiefly of familiar music, and the solo performers were all of them present members of the School. Both of these qualities contributed to an undoubted success.

Dealing first with the ensemble pieces, there were three numbers for the orchestra and one for the choir. As was to be expected the latter took higher rank than the former. One does not play a difficult instrument by the light of nature, be it string, wind, or percussion; but the natural man—and even his father the natural boy—is a singer of sorts. On this occasion it was the right sort. The choir sang naturally and expressively, and specially good was their starting in perfect tune from a quietly hummed note and maintaining the pitch without accompaniment. The usual difficulty of obtaining in a School Choir sufficient strength in the inner parts was evident so far as the tenors are concerned, but the altos were quite adequate.

The Orchestra, too, is to be congratulated on their part of the programme. The first and last numbers went very well, with good feeling in the matter of rhythm. One could not expect the delicate effects of the "Unfinished" Symphony to be brought out, seeing the brass parts were represented by one cornet and the piano, which last also stood deputy for bassoon and clarinet. Perhaps those wind instruments which were present tried at times to make up for the absence of the others by doing more than their "bit" in the quiet parts; but at any rate there was no faltering or uncertainty, no false entries, and the beauties of Schubert's haunting tunes were not lost on the audience. The 'cellos did bravely under their special responsibilities. Having stood their baptism of fire let them take heart and gain greater tone and confidence which only come by much practice. Perhaps one hint to the drummer may be allowed—his instruments continue to vibrate and give forth sound for a considerable time after being smitten, unless checked. (The same, by the way, is true of the piano with the sustaining pedal down, and the latter makes no distinction between right notes and wrong.)

There is but little space to speak of the solo items—songs and piano pieces. All were good, and the performers succeeded in infecting their audience with their own evident appreciation of the music: we were on good terms from first to last. Perhaps Roberts' solo showed the most promise. Yates' words were commendably clear, and what a difference this makes to the listener!

One last word. It would be nice to have a new piano.

The outstanding feature of this term is the bequest to the School by the late J. J. A. Wallace, Esq., O.G., of the Library which he had formed for himself. When at school here he had been head of Woodlands, and his wish to identify himself with the school permanently by giving it books is one for which the School Library cannot be too grateful.

A large number of the books given were either already in the Library or were considered to be more suitable for the House Libraries, which have, therefore, profited also by the bequest. The remainder number 230 works, many of which comprise more than one volume. It is thus the largest gift ever received by the Library; the largest previous being made nearly 200 years ago, when the Governors presented the School with a fine collection of Classical authors, still existing in the Old Library, and referred to on one of the boards in the Big School. The present collection consists mainly of works in English Literature and Biography; largely standard works such as every Library should possess, and which it would have taken us, in our growing condition, a long time to collect. There are also works on History, Travel, and Plants.

Gifts of single works also still continue, which we gratefully acknowledge. Since last term have come the following

From Field Marshal Sir Evelyn Wood, V.C.:—
His own book on "Our Fighting Services."

From the Dean of Norwich :—
War Letters of D. O. Barnett.

From the Rev. F. G. E. Field :—
"Buried Herculanæum," by Ethel R. Barker.

From C. H. C. Osborne, Esq. :—
"In the Desert," by L. March Phillips.
"Introduction to Social Psychology," by W. McDougall.

On the Library Committee P. E. C.
Harris has been elected to fill the vacancy for Woodlands.

C. H. TYLER, Librarian.

O.G. NEWS.

The following account has reached us of the circumstances under which J. G. de Viti, who is in the Italian Army, was wounded :—

The whole Brigade of Granatieri di Sardegna was rushed up into the firing line, and was undoubtedly the means of closing the gates against the Austrian invaders. They were sent up in big cars, and found themselves on ground quite new to them, where they did not in the least know the positions, and where the line they had to hold was far too extensive for their numbers, so that it was impossible for the different companies to keep in touch.

De Viti's platoon (60 men), under the command of a 2nd Lieutenant, was ordered to occupy a certain ridge, commanding a view across the valley to heights on whose slopes the main body of the regiment, under the command of Colonel Bignami, was engaged. The young officer took a look at the position, and sent back word that he must have reinforcements, otherwise the position was absolutely untenable, as against his platoon of 60 men there was a whole Austrian battalion with a great number of machine guns. The answer was that no reinforcements could be sent, and he must hold the position as best he could. Again he sent back word that the position was untenable and he felt he could not assume the responsibility. A brusque answer came :—"Your orders are to hold the position," upon which 2nd Lieut. F. shot himself. De Viti's Captain then said to him, "Well, de Viti, you must take command and do the best you can." So de Viti, of course, said he would fight as long as he could, and went up with his men.

Fortunately, on reaching the ridge, he found that there were caverns in the rocks in which his men could be at least partially concealed. But suddenly there came an order from a Divisional Commander at a distance, to place chevaux de frise in front of the position, and the men who were to carry out the order arrived on the scene.

De Viti sent a message :—"Here I have the rare good fortune of being able to screen my men from view and for heaven's sake don't make me place the chevaux de frise, which would simply point out the spot to the enemy." At the same time he sent away the men with the chevaux de frise, saying "Qui commando io," and refusing to have it placed. Later, word came back from his captain, telling him to act according to his judgement.

Meanwhile, on the opposite slopes, the battle raged. After some hours de Viti saw fresh grey-green troops pushing up the valley. "At last the reinforcements are coming"—and to his great relief he saw that they were in great numbers. But as he continued to watch the new troops streaming in it struck him as strange that they should advance in the open with no effort at concealment and unmolested by the enemy artillery; so he took a good look at them through the field-glasses, and beheld the little white cross at the back of the baretté, denoting Austrians. Colonel Bignami's column was being surrounded by Austrian detachments which had forced the position that should have held them back at the entrance to the valley. And the enemy troops were pressing forward in overwhelming numbers. De Viti at once sent to the commander of the detachment of infantry posted below asking for reinforcements and explaining what was happening. He was sent half a company. He then divided his platoon, leaving part of it to hold the ridge against the advancing Austrian battalion, while with the remainder and the fresh half company of infantry he wheeled round and started off to flank the new Austrian menace, and give what support he could to Colonel Bignami and the main column. He was advancing thus at the head of his men when he was shot through the arm. His first impression was that the arm had fallen off, and instinctively he stooped down to pick the arm up from the ground. Of course in a moment he perceived how it was, picked up the revolver which had fallen from his helpless right hand, and, with the revolver in his left hand started forward again with his men. After another few paces a ball passed through the fleshy part of his leg at the thigh, and he dropped unconscious, and remembers nothing more till he found himself lying in the dressing station. Meanwhile, the officer sent up with the infantry had taken command, further reinforcements had been hurried up, and, although it was impossible to save the central column, yet the position in de Viti's charge was held, and the Austrians did not get through. The gates were closed.

The wounded lay for six hours in the little dressing station, completely surrounded by the enemy. Then at nightfall the stretcher bearers succeeded in creeping warily out, and in making their way through the ravine. Out of 120 officers in de Viti's regiment three remain—a Captain, a Lieutenant, and de Viti himself.

C. I. F. Maynard has gone to Mesopotamia from India with a unit of Sappers and Miners.

T. G. Hyde has rejoined his regiment in Egypt, and G. N. Lomax his regiment at Newcastle-on-Tyne.

H. I. Hanmer, E. L. Heyworth, T. Q. Back and R. H. Johnson have joined the R.F.C.; the last-named is at the Central Flying School, Upavon.

G. E. Giles, who has qualified as an Observer in the R.F.C., has returned from the Front and is at present stationed at Narborough, near Swaffham, where he is collecting material for a new Squadron of the R.F.C.

Capt. E. F. Hirtzel is the Adjutant of the Aircraft Park of the R.F.C. at South Farnborough.

W. T. K. Braunholtz is at H.M. Munitions Factory, Sandicroft, near Chester.

L. H. Knowles and A. C. Bernard have been appointed to Cadet Battalions, the former being stationed at Trinity College, Oxford, and the latter at Pembroke College, Cambridge.

SCHOOL NOTES.

A Memorial Service for Lord Kitchener was held on Tuesday, June 13th. The Corps attended in uniform, and the Brigadier and several Officers of the 3rd Mounted Brigade were also present.

The following have received their Cricket colours:—A. F. S. Douglass, J.P. Heyworth, W.A. Peggs, G. L. Turney,
